Ever since she harvested her first antelope, she's been very passionate about hunting/conservation and shooting. As a new mom, she believes now more than ever that firearms and her ability to defend herself and family are a God-given right.

Cook started onto social media under the alias Buff Cookie in the fitness industry at the request of a sponsor. She competed in multiple bikini competitions placing first in two categories at her first competition. She qualified for Nationals and competed once again in Vegas. She then met the love of her life Neal Currey, a former Army Ranger.

Together, Cook and Currey own and operate Readygunner, a major online/retail firearms business in Orem, UT. Their goal is to offer others a way to protect themselves. Cook and Currey work hard to bring unmatched customer service to their supporters. Besides selling firearms and accessories, they also offer dozens of firearm safety and training courses.

In addition to documenting her fitness journey, Cook now uses her social media influence to promote our Second Amendment rights and the importance of self-protection. She has worked with companies such as Kimber, Kahr Arms, Auto-Ordnance, Magnum Research and others to help promote the right to bear arms.
